Dear Reader,

In this issue, we present a variety of topics relevant to medical practice, ranging from pediatric emergencies to mental health issues and palliative care. Let's briefly explore each of these topics:

Rapid Sequence Intubation in Pediatric Emergencies: This integrative review provides current information on optimizing this crucial technique to protect the airways of critically ill patients.

Screen Time and Child Obesity: This study investigates the relationship between screen time and child obesity, stressing the importance of awareness-building and potential interventions.

Burnout in Medical Residency: This narrative literature review describes proposals to reduce burnout among resident physicians, focusing on practices such as mindfulness and self-compassion.

Resident Physicians' Knowledge of Palliative Care: This article discusses resident physicians' understanding of palliative care, highlighting the need to address terminality and the integrality of life during professional training.

Tropical Pyomyositis with Atypical Manifestations: This intriguing case report explores this muscle infection, its complications, and diagnostic challenges.

Other equally essential topics are discussed in this issue and deserve your attention.

Our mission is to keep you updated and inspired. Medicine is vast and multifaceted, and we always share new discoveries with enthusiasm.

Happy reading!
