The Journal Pediatric Residency and scientific production

Marilene Crispino[1]

The quest for quality in the publications of the electronic journal Pediatric Residency (Residência Pediátrica [RP]) has been the goal of the editorial board since the online launch of the first issue, in 2011. For this to become a reality, our routine involves working in stages, aiming to achieve the goals that have been carefully planned over time.

The global quality process comprises a complex network of actions that includes the authors, reviewers, consultants, and even layout artists, as well as the social media in which the journal participates. Thus, we have a great responsibility towards our readers; this leads to a huge demand for initiatives that fully meet the expectations of our attentive and assiduous audience.

The starting point of the path that has been traveled by the RP was based on the understanding that a scientific publication has the primary role of communicating and disseminating knowledge.

Thus, the strategy used to expand and improve our communication is to reproduce the contents of the RP in English (from this edition onwards) and in Spanish (since 2014). This initiative has allowed for a universal integration of knowledge, ensuring accessibility to all concerned, ranging from medical students to professionals who already practice in the pediatric field. This scientific internationalization has had a very positive impact, substantially increasing the number of accesses and downloads.

Knowing that efficiently publicizing the journal is an important factor in increasing the visibility to readers and the scientific community, the RP maintains a presence on social networks through Facebook (FB). Using a less formal language, it is possible to spread information, interact with our national and international followers, receive suggestions, and thereby establish a connection with a group of individuals who share common values and interests on the Internet.

The use of electronic media and the increasing volume of information require promptness and speed. For this reason, we relied on the assistance of a librarian in order to ensure that the information search was carried out correctly and securely.

Therefore, the fundamental premise of the RP is to be a journal of continuous learning and updating knowledge, allowing unrestricted access to its content, with interactive participation by the readers and contributions from all authors and researchers who value the dissemination of high-quality scientific production.

Your participation as a reader of the RP not only distinguishes us; it makes us very proud. Access our website http://www.residenciapediatrica.com.br and our Facebook page (FB). We welcome your suggestions to continue improving our work.
